Chicken remains staple in tailgating cuisine

By BETH HENDRICKS
For The Herald-Dispatch

HUNTINGTON — It may be West Virginia University on the schedule, but it's chicken on the menu.

Though there will be plenty of bacon, eggs and sausage gravy to go around Saturday morning before the Thundering Herd meets the Mountaineers at Joan C. Edwards Stadium, career tailgater Brian Pauley said he expects more than one buffet line to include the feathered fowl.

"People are going to have fun with the chicken idea," said Pauley, whose tailgating gear and equipment totals more than $130,000. "When (former Marshall coach) Bobby Pruett has West Virginia Chicken on his menu in the restaurant (at the Pullman Plaza Hotel), what do you expect?"

Veteran tailgaters expect a different kind of tailgating atmosphere before the Sept. 8 kick-off, with fewer fans tailgating before the 11 a.m. game time and more joining the parties afterward.

The menu will be decidedly different this weekend, with breakfast casseroles, biscuits and gravy and bloody Mary's all on tap, and a pig roast with brown beans and cornbread afterward. Hot dogs, hamburgers and brats are a given regardless of the time.

"Our biggest tailgate will be after the game. Of course, we're hoping to celebrate a victory," Pauley said. "Either way, we'll be breaking bread with WVU fans who want to join us."

Pauley said there are a few tips to creating a successful tailgate, from food to atmosphere.

"It doesn't really matter what you do, just have fun with it," he said. "Clean up after yourself and respect others around you."

Serious tailgaters recommend keeping the food hot and the atmosphere family-friendly. While there are plenty of adult beverages around (no kegs or glass bottles are allowed on Marshall property), keeping things under control is key.

"We hear from lots of fans of away teams that they've never seen a place like Marshall tailgating

Industrial Age housewares make interesting, intriguing collectibles

Labor Day brings to mind Labor Unions and the struggles they suffered to organize and exist over the last century.

There are many reminders of those efforts that bound the working men together. Banners, buttons, posters, pins and more are there for the collector who wants to honor those long ago heroes of the working man. There are also reminders of those who kept the home fires burning while their men marched on the picket line.

Women in the last century were the work horses of the household. They cleaned, washed and scrubbed their way into the modern age.

Many of those tools they tamed and suffered are now part of the vintage and antique collectibles market.

Box irons, wash boards, primitive cookware and more were the hand tools they knew.

When carpeting came into a home prior to the early 1900s, the only way to clean it was to take it outside, hang it over a line and beat it with a rug beater. Today rug beaters are often collected for their interesting shapes and sizes. They make for interesting wall art since vacuum cleaners now offer an alternative.

Vacuum cleaners were another item that aided the industrious housewife in the past.

The electric versions have been around for about 100 years. The bulky, hard to manage, hand-pumped models have been in existence from the mid-1800s. The variety of these early cleaners are a testimony to the huge market waiting for relief from the mundane task of cleaning the carpet.

Once electricity became common in most households, large and small appliances exploded on the scene. For example, washing machines evolved from the scrub board to the mechanical agitator box with attached wringer. Many versions of the new electric irons, mixers, toasters and coffee pots were soon relieving the workload of the housewife. These early inventions are intriguing and fun to collect.

Toasters were among the household inventions that made housework a little easier for women during the Industrial Age.

There is no doubt that men and women have labored long and they both deserve a day of rest and recognition. If one is interested in seeing examples of household appliances and other inventions of the Industrial Age, the Heritage Farm Museum and Village in west Huntington has a wonderful display to peruse. This is a great place to gain a new appreciation for the life of working men and women in the past.

Tailgating

where everyone is just tickled to death to invite them in to tailgate with them," Pauley said. "We want to beat them on the field, of course, but we like to wine and dine them as well.

"Great hospitality reflects well on the fans, but also on the university, the city and the entire state."

In selecting a menu, Pauley said it is best to stay away from eggs, dairy and mayonnaise, unless you have the proper equipment and experience to handle these items outdoors.

"If you're doing slaw, maybe do a mustard slaw. It lasts a lot longer and you don't have to worry about it," he explained. "And, make sure all of your meats stay cold. The best thing to invest in is either a three-to-five-day cooler or a seven-day cooler like we use. It's going to have more insulation in it."

Pauley said if you're attempting fried foods invest the $30 and get a fryer mat to protect the ground beneath you.

"Don't get grease all over the parking lot," he said. "And, clean up after yourself. If the place you're tailgating doesn't have a dumpster or trash cans, take the trash with you. We like to leave our area cleaner than when we got there."

What if you don't want to create your own tailgate, but you'd like to weasel your way into one? Pauley said there's even etiquette for that.

"We ask for small donations to help offset the cost of our food," he explained, adding that one game's food bill can run $2,500. "It's very minimal and it's all you want to eat and drink.

"I'm honestly convinced you could walk through any tailgating lot and if you want to tailgate and have the personality for it, somebody will give you a hotdog and invite you in. Tailgating is not this regimented thing."

Pauley said tailgaters are always welcome at the Smokin' Thunder location, this year in the lot next to Logan's Meats.

"Win or lose, we'll still be there," Pauley said. "If we win, not only will we be eating, but we'll probably be on suicide watch with the WVU fans who join us."
